Washington Studio School (WSS) is pleased to present a solo exhibit of paintings and drawings of figurative works by Washington, DC artist and faculty member Diane Wilson.

Diane writes, "Painting is simultaneously a treacherous and exhilarating process, one that is difficult, if not impossible to describe with words. The human figure, particularly in dance, physically effects and distracts me. Each painting is the detritus of battle."

Born in Madison, Wisconsin Diane and her family moved to Washington when she was nine. She received a bachelor's degree in English literature from the American University. No longer able to deny her need to paint, she enrolled in the graduate painting program where she met and studied with her mentor, the late Robert D'Arista.

For several decades, Diane has been teaching drawing and painting at the Washington Studio school in Washington, DC. She maintains a studio in her home.
